Is “Aging in Place” Right for Me?

Aging in place gives you the opportunity to maintain choice in your life, and to live where you want for as long as you’re able, while still having access to supportive resources when you need them. It means freedom to securely focus on the fun in life now, rather than planning for every circumstance you may face in the years to come.

Aging in place at an RLC community means enjoying the freedom and comfort of your own living space while experiencing conveniences and social opportunities you’d never have at home!

Q: Why should I move to an RLC independent senior living community?

A: Living in an RLC community provides all-inclusive conveniences such as chef-prepared meals and housekeeping services, leaving you time to celebrate your best life doing what you love most. We take care of everything for one simple monthly payment!

Q: Isn’t RLC independent senior living? What if I need additional help as I age?

A: While living independently in an RLC community, you can contract with your home care provider of choice whenever and for whatever you need. That way, you can continue enjoying the amenities in your community.

Q: How is Resort Lifestyle Communities different than a Continuing Care Retirement Community?

A: Although many CCRCs offer independent living, there are often significant entrance fees and financial commitments, and later-stage health and age minimums. RLC communities welcome seniors 55+ with various needs and make it easy to transition with no buy-in fee and one simple monthly payment.

Q: Shouldn’t I just move to a CCRC? Then I only have to move once.

A: Even if you live in a CCRC, you’ll have to make an intra-community move to the appropriate care unit if and when you need additional support. That means downsizing and packing a second time anyway.

Q: Why do some communities offer three care levels, Independent, Assisted and Memory Care?

Those communities often are required to license ALL of their apartments. So, although it may say independent, the residents are still subject to assessments and care level (and corresponding fee) changes as determined by the community.
